Steroid Use Rumored: Ops Bowling Team Takes the Fifth

Trailer 34 news agency discovered today that the FBI is investigating a rumor that Omega Operations Bowling Team has been using steroids to maintain their superhuman bowling abilities over the past several years.

No comment has been made directly by any team member, though Operations spokesperson Jeffrey Reel did indicate that there was no proof of any such incident. “The use of steroids has not been and never will be part of our bowling core values,” said Mr. Reel. “And I challenge anyone to offer proof to the contrary.”

Mr. Reel, who is often known for his low key demeanor, was on fire at the press conference held in the Big House basement. “You guys in the press are always stirring up this kind of trouble, without thinking of the impact it will have on the team, their families, or their fans.”

Some school age fans of the Operations Bowling team seemed very upset by the rumor, as the lined up with banners outside Rhinebecks local schools, some reading: “Say it ain’t so, Danny” and “Adam is always our hero.” Tears befell the cheeks of the most avid fans, who wept upon hearing the news that their heroes values may have gone astray.

Operations has retained the legal counsel of lawyer extraordinaire George Kaufman, who has asked his clients to remain silent on the matter. “We cannot assume guilt on the part of my clients,” Mr. Kaufman said. “But we can assume that anything they say can be taken out of context by investigators to give the appearance of guilt.”

The sudden news of the investigation has not deterred Omega from keeping scheduling its annual Bowling Championship at Hoe

Bowl on the Hill in Kingston. Fans wishing to watch the event can show up live at 6pm on March 30th, or tune in on ESP’N, the psychic sports channel. Admission to the event is free for Omega employees, and includes two slices of pizza plus soda.
